

Blockchain's Billion-Dollar Babies

GET MY FREE REPORT

Fellow Investor,

Corporations across multiple sectors are pouring effort and money into blockchain operations. For example, the venture capital division of Foxconn has invested $40 million in six blockchain startups to date.

Enterprise-level blockchain applications provide enormous benefits and advantages, such as facilitating transactions faster, safer and with greater transparency than conventional systems. But that's just scratching the surface.

Food suppliers can use blockchain to track food from the instant of harvesting to the arrival on your local grocery shelves. Insurance companies can deposit a payment into your bank account within seconds of a medical treatment.

Spending on blockchain by business and government is expected to reach $2.9 billion in 2019—a spike of 89% in just one year.

But how can the ordinary investor find companies that are leveraging blockchain in meaningful ways?

Introducing Forbes Blockchain 50: Billion-Dollar Babies—the first annual list from Forbes, which identifies big companies that are committing manpower and capital to build innovative technology.

When you download your FREE report, you'll discover companies in nine key sectors that are leading the way in blockchain technology, including:
